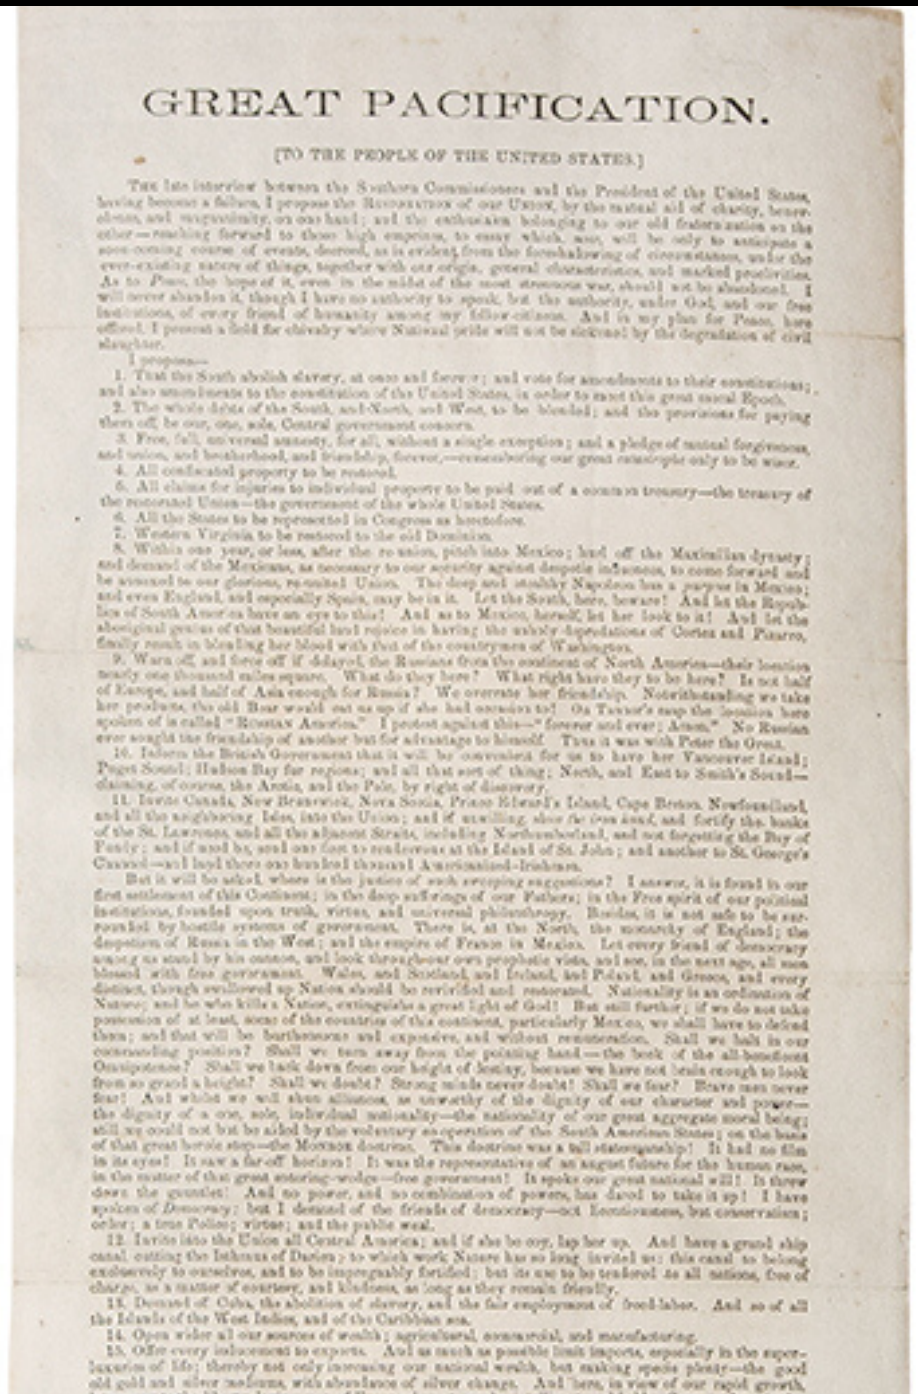
CIVIL WAR
ESTICK [OR ESTWICK] EVANS

Great Pacification. (To the People of the United States) ... I propose the restoration of our Union ... Peace, the hope of it, even in the midst of the most strenuous war, should not be abandoned ...

Washington, D.C.: February 13, 1865. Letterpress broadside. 24 x 8 1/2 inches. Expert restoration on verso.

An unusual broadside Civil War peace proposal.

(#38207) $ 1,800.



GREAT PACIFICATION.

[TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.]

THE late interview between the Southern Commissioners and the President of the United States, having become a failure, I propose the RESTORATION of our UNION, by the natural aid of charity, benevolence, and magnanimity, on one hand; and the enthusiasm belonging to our old fraternization on the other—reaching forward to those high empyrean, to every which, now, will be only to anticipate a soon-coming course of events, decreed, as is evident from the foreshadowing of circumstances, under the ever-existing nature of things, together with our origin, general characteristics, and marked proclivities. As to Peace, the hope of it, even in the midst of the most strenuous war, should not be abandoned. I will never abandon it, though I have no authority to speak, but the authority, under God, and our free institutions, of every friend of humanity among my fellow-citizens. And in my plan for Peace, here offered, I present a field for chivalry where National pride will not be sickened by the degradation of civil slaughter.

I propose—

1. That the South abolish slavery, at once and forever; and vote for amendments to their constitutions; and also amendments to the constitution of the United States, in order to enact this great moral Epoch.
2. The whole debts of the South, and North, and West, to be blended; and the provisions for paying them off, be one, one, sole, Central government concern.
3. Free, full, universal amnesty, for all, without a single exception; and a pledge of mutual forgiveness, and union, and brotherhood, and friendship, forever,—remembering our great catastrophe only to be wiser.
4. All confiscated property to be restored.
5. All claims for injuries to individual property to be paid out of a common treasury—the treasury of the restored Union—the government of the whole United States.
6. All the States to be represented in Congress as heretofore.
7. Western Virginia to be restored to the old Dominion.
8. Within one year, or less, after the re-union, pitch into Mexico; head off the Maximilian dynasty; and demand of the Mexicans, as necessary to our security against despotic influences, to come forward and be annexed to our glorious, re-united Union. The deep and stealthy Napoleon has a purpose in Mexico; and even England, and especially Spain, may be in it. Let the South, here, beware! And let the Republics of South America have an eye to this! And as to Mexico, herself, let her look to it! And let the aboriginal genius of that beautiful land rejoice in having the widely-lapsed ages of Cortez and Pizarro, finally result in blending her blood with that of the countrymen of Washington.
9. Warn off, and force off if delayed, the Russians from the continent of North America—their location nearly one thousand miles square. What do they here? What right have they to be here? Is not half of Europe, and half of Asia enough for Russia? We overrate her friendship. Notwithstanding we take her products, the old Bear would eat us up if she had occasion to! On Tanner's map the location here spoken of is called "RUSSIAN AMERICA." I protest against this—" forever and ever; Amen." No Russian ever sought the friendship of another but for advantage to himself. THUS it was with Peter the Great.
10. Inform the British Government that it will be convenient for us to have her Vancouver Island; Puget Sound; Hudson Bay for regions; and all that sort of thing; North, and East to Smith's Sound—claiming, of course, the Arctic, and the Pole, by right of discovery.
11. Invite Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, Cape Breton, Newfoundland, and all the neighboring Isles, into the Union; and if unwilling, show the iron hand, and fortify the banks of the St. Lawrence, and all the adjacent Straits, including Northumberland, and not forgetting the Bay of Fundy; and if need be, send one fleet to rendezvous at the Island of St. John; and another to St. George's Channel—and hoyl there one hundred thousand Americanized-Irishmen.

But it will be asked, where is the justice of such sweeping suggestions? I answer, it is found in our first settlement of this Continent; in the deep sufferings of our Fathers; in the Free spirit of our political institutions, founded upon truth, virtue, and universal philanthropy. Besides, it is not safe to be surrounded by hostile systems of government. There is, at the North, the monarchy of England; the despotism of Russia in the West; and the empire of France in Mexico. Let every friend of democracy among us stand by his colors, and look throughout our prophetic vista, and see, in the next age, all men blessed with free government. Wales, and Scotland, and Ireland, and Poland, and Greece, and every distinct, though swallowed up Nation should be rectified and restored. Nationality is an ordination of Nature; and he who kills a Nation, extinguishes a great light of God! But still further; if we do not take possession of at least, some of the countries of this continent, particularly Mexico, we shall have to defend them; and that will be burthensome and expensive, and without remuneration. Shall we halt in our commanding position? Shall we turn away from the pointing hand—the hand of the all-beneficent Omnipotence? Shall we back down from our height of destiny, because we have not brain enough to look from so grand a height? Shall we doubt? Strong minds never doubt! Shall we fear? Brave men never fear! And whilst we will shun alliances, as unworthy of the dignity of our character and power—the dignity of a one, sole, individual nationality—the nationality of our great aggregate moral being; still we could not but be aided by the voluntary co-operation of the South American States; on the basis of that great heroic step—the MONROE doctrine. This doctrine was a full statesmanship! It had no film in its eyes! It saw a far-off horizon! It was the representative of an august future for the human race, in the matter of that great entering-wedge—free government! It spoke our great national will! It threw down the gauntlet! And no power, and no combination of powers, has dared to take it up! I have spoken of Democracy; but I demand of the friends of democracy—not licentiousness, but conservation; order; a true Police; virtue; and the public weal.

12. Invite into the Union all Central America; and if she be coy, lap her up. And have a grand ship canal cutting the Isthmus of Darien; to which work Nature has so long invited us: this canal to belong exclusively to ourselves, and to be impregnably fortified; but its use to be tendered to all nations, free of charge, as a matter of courtesy, and kindness, as long as they remain friendly.
13. Demand of Cuba, the abolition of slavery, and the fair employment of free labor. And so of all the Islands of the West Indies, and of the Caribbian sea.
14. Open wider all our sources of wealth; agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing.
15. Offer every inducement to experts. And as much as possible limit imports, especially in the superfluities of life; thereby not only increasing our national wealth, but making specie plenty—the good old gold and silver sealums, with abundance of silver change. And here, in view of our rapid growth,

For the Friend.

TO MY CRUTCH.

Dedicated to the FLEAS at Keaiva, Hawaii.

Thou art no great beauty, I frankly own;
In paint and varnish thou never hast shone;
A straight pine stick, with a cross at top,—
Manufactured at home, and not in a shop,
Is all thou art; yet ever in thee
Of cherished friends a memento I see,
And a wretch were I, did I not as such,
Esteem thee highly, my honored crutch!

But more, for thy meek, obedient ways
And thy faithful service, I give thee praise;
For when the fleas—oh! vermin accurst—
Hilt-deep in my flesh their sabres thrust,
And my foot—no longer, alas! of use—
I had to hold up, as I've seen a goose,
In a plight that a heart of stone might touch,
To my aid thou earnest, my faithful crutch!

And for two long months, if I wished to go
No more than across the room, or so,
At my side thou wert, ever prompt and ready
With a vigorous arm my gait to steady;
Or, if I reclined, thou still did'st stand,
A dutiful slave, within reach of my hand;
Yea, ever unwearied, though burdened much,
Thou serv'd'st me well, my patient crutch!

And I give thee honor for service done;
A wreath of rhymes thou hast nobly won.
Henceforth, in glory and cobwebs drest,
May'st thou in thy attic securely rest,
'Till some poor stranger, of evil luck,
By the deadly dirk of a flea is struck,
Then thee, for support, may he firmly clutch,
And find thee a friend, thou faithful crutch!

But alas! this world of ours is black
With other fleas than Keaiva's pack;
And other crutches are found to be good,
Besides inanimate ones of wood;
For malice and envy and hate are here,
Leaving a "flea" in each idle ear;
And the spirit that feels their envenomed touch,
Must needs be in want of a friendly crutch.

Oh, were all the friends that in life we meet,
As firm as thou, and no more a cheat,
The viper of slander might bruise our heel,
And our head the blows of misfortune feel,—
And yet, erect, with an honest face,
Pursue we might our appointed race;
For, on those relying that loved us much,
We'd find, in our need, a faithful crutch.

The Seamen's Friend.

For the Friend.

A Forecastle Yarn: or the Effects of Running Away.

BY BLUE WATER.

Some six or eight years ago, dear reader, I embarked on board a whale ship, bound to the Pacific ocean after sperm whales. We had a good ship and customary outfit for a three year's voyage, with twenty-three men and boys all told. First we had a Captain, who was perhaps no better nor worse than he should be, a good mate and second mate, with boatsteerers, cooper, shipkeeper, four seamen, and the rest young men and boys, who had never been at sea before.—Some of us were New England farmers' sons, embarked in the whaling business just to see how we liked it, not knowing or caring whether, after the present voyage, we ever shipped in another vessel or not. Others there were, who had been dodging sheriffs long enough from place to place, and who were glad to get away from the law, courts of justice and prisons, not caring where.—We had all run in debt more or less, on the voyage, before leaving. When my story commences, we had doubled Cape Horn, and taken two or three whales off the coast of Chili, where we had to boil them out in cold weather. At this time we did not like the whaling business much. Some of us had begun to talk of running away, as we were bound down the coast, no doubt to anchor in some port. We had got into lower latitudes, where the weather was mild and pleasant, and we were standing whole watches, that is, one half of the crew kept the deck four hours, and was then relieved by the other. It was now past 10 P. M.; the larboard watch was bringing midnight. We were lounging about, some here and some there. Among us there was an old salt, sitting on the windlass, when one of the green hands, going up to him, said "Jack," (for his name was John Rivers,) "did you ever run away?" He drew a long breath, and replied, "No, thank God! but I came near enough to it once." Surprised at his answer, we all gathered round him, and said "How near did you come? tell us all about it;" so he related as follows:

"You must know boys, that I commenced going to sea sometime before the late war. Although quite young at the time it commenced, I had seaman written against my name, but ordinary came first. Well, I was knocking about all the war, sometimes in prison, sometimes in a privateer, and sometimes at home. But after peace was declared, I went in the merchant service about six years, then went to Nantucket, and shipped on board of the ——, Capt. ——, bound round Cape Horn after a cargo of oil. We calculated to cruise on the coast of Chili, Peru, and perhaps on the off-shore ground—Japan was not then thought of. We took a whale off the coast of Brazil, and more soon after getting round the Horn. We anchored in Callao with about 200 bbls., six months out. Our Captain was an old man. He had commanded a ship in the business before the war, but when it broke out, moved into the state of New York, where he lived to the end of it, and then came out whaling again. He was a shrewd old fellow, but never could refuse us money. An anecdote used to be told about him, whether true or not I cannot say. He was in a tailor's shop, being measured for a suit of clothes. The girls of the shop kept snickering all the time he was there. When he went out, the foreman asked them what they were laughing at; they said, to think how he must have looked going on board of his ship in his drawers, after having sold his pantaloons, alluding to a circumstance said to have happened the voyage before. Well, you see the old man had a good many traps to sell, so every time the boat went ashore we had something to smuggle. Now there was a man on board by the name of James Jameson, an active man, he could hand, reef, steer, knot and
